HISTORY BITES BACK

Launching a rocket at 250 years of taboos and ignorance

Written and Directed by: Trisha Morton-Thomas
Craig Anderson
Producer: Bridget May

DIRECTOR STATEMENT

History Bites Back evolved and eventuated at an incredibly difficult time in my life. Development and Filming was particularly painful and heart wrenching for me. Two nephews suicided while we were still writing. I watched my aunt pass away days before we commenced filming, then on the first day of principle photography, I learnt my sister had terminal cancer and was in palliative care and I was also helping my cousin organise her mother's funeral between scenes and yet it was 'normal' to me and most of the Indigenous cast and crew on this doco. I felt the injustice of this 'normal' and it is reflected in the tone of History Bites Back.

In essence I was wrung out and worn thin by what was essentially a decade long, endless waves of loss and grieving in my family as well as feeling hampered by appeasing 'Australian Sensitivities' in representing authentic Indigenous voices and experiences on screen. I felt disheartened, disillusioned and deeply aggrieved by this country and its long tradition of presenting non-sense and non-truths about Australia's first peoples and our history - In traditional media and now especially in online Social Media.

ignoring the well-rehearsed, worn and generational put downs by clueless Australians with no understanding of history and its social impact on Aboriginals, is the rational thing to do - But I'm only human and often the strain of the constant, ongoing and unjust vilification of Indigenous peoples, barbs painfully deep. Non-deeper than the annual -

THE WORST DAY OF ALL...

Historically commemorated as the national 'Day Of Mourning' by Aboriginal peoples since 1938 then, eighty years later officially adopted federally as 'Australia Day' in 1994 - January 26th has become an ugly and violent social media frenzy of historical inaccuracies and racist rhetoric's. On this day, more than every other day, Australia's Indigenous people are assaulted by a tsunami of baseless, factually inaccurate, on-line racial vilification that wears on both mental and emotional well-being of Aboriginal people of all ages.

HISTORY BITES BACK is a reply to the historical myths and negative Social media stereotyping of a unique Australian minority; of which me and my family are a part of.

DIRECTOR STATEMENT

Yeah, so taking into account everything Trisha has just mentioned, she then engaged me to try and make this content funny.

Luckily, Trisha has the darkest sense of humour and was open to my shenanigans. Trisha believes that the way forward is working with whitefellas, and hopefully we walked the fine line between palatable and outrage.

CRAIG ANDERSON
DIRECTOR, WRITER

SYNOPSIS

One Line Synopsis

History Bites Back is satirical, self-aware, and not afraid to launch a rocket into taboo issues.

One Paragraph Synopsis

Aboriginal filmmaker Trisha Morton-Thomas (Destiny Does Alice, Occupation: Native) teams up again with Comedy Director/Writer, Craig Anderson (Black Comedy, Occupation: Native), and some of Australia's freshest comedic talent (Steven Oliver and Elaine Crombie) to bite back at negative social media comments and steer the conversation to look into the historical context of the fortunes and misfortunes of Aboriginal Australians from social security, citizenship and equal wages to nuclear bombs and civil actions.

One Page Synopsis

History Bites Back is the antidote to the boring, faceless, and overly sincere docos that often populate Indigenous issues. It's comical, self-aware, and not afraid to launch a rocket into taboo issues.

Our continent has over a hundred thousand years of black history but when the whitefellas began to build their country on top of Aboriginal mob's countries, they believed that the Aboriginal population would die out. Luckily they were wrong, but ever since then the whitefellas haven't really known what to do with the blackfellas and the blackfellas haven't been able to get rid of the whitefellas..

....and now there's other fellas, biggest mob of fellas from all over the world sharing this place called Australia. Still, our schools concentrate on the last 250 odd years of colonisation and most of that through a white colonial lens.

So, in this day of modern technology, unlimited information and the World Wide Web, Aboriginal people still put up with a boatload of ignorance and misconceptions from our fellow Australians.

From the creators of 8MMM Aboriginal Radio and Occupation: Native and continuing in the tradition of films like We Don't Need a Map to tackle the hard issues with comedy and humour History Bites Back is a one hour, presenter-led documentary designed for a modern audience to be segmented into bite sized episodes for additional on-line streaming options.

PRODUCER STATEMENT BRIDGET MAY

Being given this opportunity to produce a production like History Bites Back was a great opportunity for me. Having worked with Trisha and Craig on Occupation: Native as a production Manager and Post Production Supervisor, I jumped at the opportunity to be the producer on this project having really enjoyed working with them both before.

I love living in Alice Springs, and I have been here for over 20 years, but the open racism that is seen on the local Alice Springs Community Facebook Forum and sometimes in the streets, is, to put it bluntly, disgusting. It is endless and it is not just here, and it is not just from a random white bloke who has just moved here, it comes from everywhere even people you thought you might know. The ability to make something that could make people stop and think prior to hitting 'enter' when they comment online, is an awesome thought.

Many of the cast said that they were unaware of some of the historical things that happened and were quite shocked. It is about time that people learned more about the history of the country they live in and how their Australia came about, what happened in history to get us to where we are today.

I hope that this project really hits home and makes people think about what they are reading or replying to online, how they see the history of this country and First Nations people, and frankly, go and find out more for themselves with some real research. I am immensely appreciative to Trisha and Rachel for trusting I could produce this for them and hope everyone enjoys it.

PRODUCTION NOTES

We began the development of History Bites Back with a healthy amount of knowledge and research and this certainly helped in the scripting process and allowed us to go in with eyes wide open. We had known from making Occupation: Native, that we were going to delve into areas that would be hard for Trisha, who lives with these social media comments on a day-to-day basis. We wanted to ensure that Trisha was supported throughout the process, and, if at all possible, had some fun while making History Bites Back.

Craig Anderson was brought on board at an early stage to help balance out the racism and full-on assault on indigenous people, by bringing in some comedy and satire to the program and we think we squarely hit the mark on that.

Using the presenter-led narrative, supported by graphic effects, animation, archival materials, re-enactments and infused with comedy, satire and good old fashioned irony to bring home more of the story behind Australia's black history, History Bites Back takes a cheeky swipe at the negative historical press that continues to plague Aboriginal people to the modern day.

History Bites Back uses humour and modern filmmaking techniques to unpack the negative social bias of 250 odd years of shared history between its First Peoples and modern-day Australians.

Though there is serious historical and contemporary content in this film, humour, comedy and irony are the attitudes that drive History Bites Back. Trisha and Craig brought their combined comedic skills and perspectives to present a modern take on history that dares to poke fun at the establishment and challenge the status quo of the prevailing historical narrative of this nation. History Bites Back weaves a historical narrative through the re-enactments of historical events, scenarios, animations, archival materials, social media commentary, black screen and simple presenter-led storytelling. Why make it easy, where is the fun in that.

As with all documentaries, things rarely goes to plan, but it was invaluable to start with such a strong script, that was the foundation of the film. It was also immensely helpful that we were such a small crew and were able to be immediately responsive to situations as they occurred and the unpredictable movements of people and cast. Having such a tight time frame to shoot, and it being so scripted, meant that we knew exactly what we needed, but on the other hand, we had very little room for error, though changes were made, and it was great working through all of that.

For the most part History Bites Back was shot in a blackened studio environment, reminiscent of a live performance space, using props and simple sets such as office equipment, signage and counters. History Bites Back was also shoot in locations around Alice Springs, originally, we were going to shoot more on set, but found we preferred to do more outside as it gave it a much better look and feel and allowed us to mix it up.

Everything was shot in Alice Springs, including using 100% crew from Alice Springs, the only people not from the NT were Steven Oliver, Elaine Crombie and Craig Anderson, and this was great! Working with a full NT crew, who all knew each other, making it a very friendly atmosphere and many laughs were had.
